► Hey, Children on the Autism Spectrum Play Too!

This book considers how we can include children on the autism spectrum into our settings and challenges you to take a look at play from the child's perspective, by Wendy Usher.

This book has been written to support those working with children on the autism spectrum and provides great ideas to encourage them to play and interact. The thoughts and resources in the book are designed to help adults work with all children to ensure they are offered the same chances and experiences as others.

► Creating Sensory Play at little or no cost

Hundreds of ideas using everyday items to create sensory play at school or in play settings.

The book considers how activities can be adapted to reflect individual children's needs. Perhaps a child who does not like touching messy play would do so by wearing latex gloves or a child who has a visual impairment can feel and smell bubbles if the bubble solution contains a little perfume or essential oil. Excellent for children who have low self-esteem and confidence, those children who need something to do with their feelings and emotions and those who find it hard to be with others.

▶ It's not all about talking, Let's Communicate!

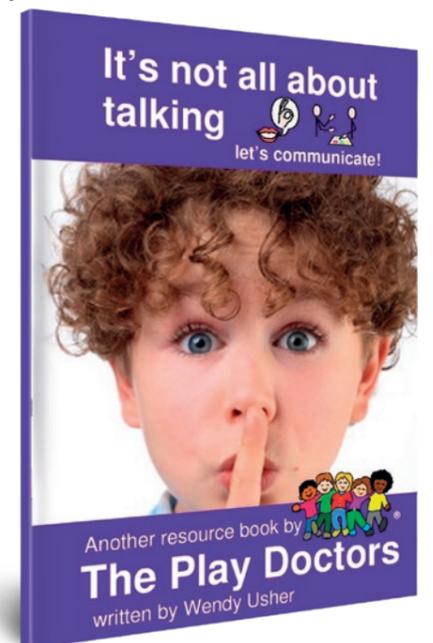

Practical resource book helping you to identify the best ways to communicate effectively, by Wendy Usher.

Communication involves far more than just using our voices so with the majority of children being visual and kinaesthetic learners, using our voices isn't always the best way to be 'heard'. This books explores ways to identify a child's individual learning styles and how to adapt communication to suit those styles.

There are lots of short case studies identifying situations where communication has worked well, not worked so well and reasons for both. It includes ideas for games and activities to support communication and will challenge you to think about how you are communicating, listening and hearing a child's voice. As a result of your work the children will learn to better use their communication styles with you and each other.
